Damaged Slides Due to Post-Terrorist USPS Treatment

Aftermath of terrorist activities for photographers includes many stories of damaged film and ruined papers, electronic this and that and just about any other kind of material which the United States Postal Service held "in quarantine."

Inquiring with the USPS "customer care" department following an article printed in the Baltimore Sun (among others) which detailed damage to processed slides sent from one museum to another, documents which aged as though they were on ancient papyrus, etc., the USPS guarantees that processed film will not be damaged by the radiation that USPS uses.

Their reply "You can mail undeveloped film to the entire country except for the following zip codes: all zip codes that begin with 202, 203, 204 and 205. Mail going to these zip codes will have their mail sanitized and the undeveloped film will be damaged."

On pressing for an answer to the actual question asked, they then said that processed film will not be damaged. They do not respond about the Museum claim.

Caution is advised to photographers: that's the best that can be said!
